No decision on moving wells

MILANO—After a three-hour-plus public hearing attended by about 75 persons Tuesday night, the Post Oak Savannah Groundwater Conservation District did not make a decision on a request to change well locations on one-third of the sites to serve the controversial Vista Ridge Pipeline.

Blue Water Vista Ridge had requested changing point of withdrawal on 11 of the 33 already-permitted sites "to accommodate topography and landowner requests."

About 10 persons spoke against the request during Tuesday's public hearing.

The matter is expected to be considered again during the POSGCD's monthly session, set for 5:30 p.m. Tuesday in the POSGCD's Milano office.

Construction on the Vista Ridge pipeline itself is expected to start in about a month. Garney Construction of Kansas City is designer and builder.

But it hasn't been a smooth month for pipeline promoters.

In addition to the opposition at Tuesday's meeting, The San Antonio Express-

News reported on Monday the two water suppliers at the core of the deal—Metropolitan Water Co. and BlueWater Systems—are back in court in litigation over payments and contracts.

Water leases in Milam and Burleson Counties—with whose groundwater the POSGCD is charged with managing—are under contract to supply San Antonio Water System with up to 16.3-billion gallons per year.

It's the largest transfer of water in Texas history, the Express-News noted.
